FALL RIVER

THE City of Fall River, situated in Southeastern Massachusetts at the head of Mount Hope Bay, and deservingly styled "The Spindle City," was incorporated April 12, 1854. The Indian name for this City was "Quequechan," which signifies "Falling Water"—hence the name "Fall River."

In 1813, when the first cotton factory was founded, there were but 30 dwelling houses and about 200 inhabitants. From that time until 1820 there was but a gradual increase, at which time a decided increase was noticed. From 1820 there has been a rapid growth until, at the present time, there are about 110,000 inhabitants.

Fall River is one of the world's famous manufacturing towns, and as the name "Spindle City" would suggest, it ranks first in the use of cotton spindles, having about one-fifth of all the cotton spindles in the United States. It is particularly noted for its large number of cotton mills—46 in number, the largest being the Fall River Iron Works which is owned and operated by an independent corporation. In the manufacture of strictly print goods this is the largest corporation in the world.

The view from the Bay is very picturesque at all times, and it is a place which would hold many charms for a lover of nature—particularly at sunset when the scenic effect is indescribably beautiful. One of the many other characteristics of this City is its excellent drinking water—while this may seem to be but a minor point, nevertheless, it has been the cause of many favorable comments from travellers, and is something which seems to be appreciated by the stranger. Fall River Water Works was established at a cost of a million and a half dollars, and is situated on Watuppa Lake—a body of water nearly 10 miles long.

Fall River is noted also for its excellent harbor accommodations, affording ample room and depth of water for the largest craft.

This City was the first to provide free text books—it was one of the first to introduce manual training in its High School—and one of the first to support free kindergartens.

Aside from the beautiful scenery, mills and water system, for which Fall River is noted, many things can be said in commendation of its splendid public buildings. Among which are the Public Library, Post Office, City Hall, Armory, Y. M. C. A. Building, and many others. Suffice to say that in order to gain a comprehension of their magnificence, they must be seen to be appreciated, or slightly altering the words of one of the greatest of poets:—

"THINGS OF BEAUTY ARE JOYS FOREVER."

NEWPORT, R. I.

EWPORT, the county seat of Newport County, is delightfully located on the shore of Narragansett Bay at the southern end of the large island—called Roodt Eylant (Red Island) by its original discoverers from New Amsterdam—hence the name later applied to the whole State. The first settlement in the State of Rhode Island was made in 1636 by Roger Williams and other refugees expelled from Massachusetts for their religious convictions. At first Newport was an independent settlement, but later, in 1644, it was united to the other colonies now included within the present limits of the State.

During the Revolutionary War, Newport suffered from the depredations of the British, who burned nearly five hundred houses and held the town for two years. In 1700 Count Rochambeau made Newport his headquarters for the troops under his command.

At one time it was earnestly believed that the site of Newport was settled by the Northmen long before the discovery of America by Columbus. The "Old Stone Mill" was pointed out as proof of their stay, but this relic is now generally assigned to the seventeenth century.

The city was one of the capitals of Rhode Island until 1900. The Newport of today is an important naval station, and is noted for its fine harbor. The location of this charming city, within easy reach by land or water from New York, Boston and other large centers, and its clear air and wonderfully equable climate, have made it a world-renowned watering-place. Here many American men of wealth and captains of industry have erected magnificent summer homes equal in every way to the best palaces of European potentates, where, free from the wearing cares of great business and financial operations, they may enjoy the long summer days secure from the intrusion of the multitude.
